WHAT TO WATCH THIS WEEK'S TOP GAMES

Indiana at Maryland

When: Noon EDT Saturday
Where: Spartan Stadium, East Lansing, Mich.
TV: BTN
Notes: The host Spartans (3-0) wrap up nonconference play and seek their first 4-0 start since 2010. Michigan State is coming off a 35-21 victory over Air Force, a comfortable triumph that included a three-touchdown lead at the half and a four-touchdown showing from QB Connor Cook. Michigan State has won 16 games in a row at home and is 28-5 all-time against the Mid-American Conference's directional Michigan schools (Central, Eastern and Western Michigan), though the Spartans stumbled against Central Michigan as recently as 2009. The Chippewas (1-2) pestered Oklahoma State in their opener.

Iowa at Michigan

When: 3 p.m. EDT Saturday
Where: Mountaineer Field, Morgantown, W.Va.
TV: Fox Sports 1
Notes: The Terrapins (2-1) bounced back from an ugly loss to Bowling Green — which, like West Virginia, pushes the tempo with a pass-heavy attack — with a 35-17 defeat of South Florida. QB Caleb Rowe, who replaced Perry Hills as Maryland's starter, became the first Terp to throw for four touchdowns in a game since Danny O'Brien did so against N.C. State in 2010. West Virginia (2-0) is coming off a bye week after dispatching Georgia Southern and Liberty to open the season. The Mountaineers lead the country in pass efficiency.

Michigan State at Northwestern

When: 3:30 EDT Saturday
Where: Ohio Stadium, Columbus, Ohio
TV: ABC/ ESPN2
Notes: A week struggling with one of the Mid-American Conference's top teams, No. 1 Ohio State (3-0) wraps up nonconference play with another solid program from that league. The Buckeyes fended off Northern Illinois 20-13, and coach Urban Meyer could be facing the need for more continuity at quarterback after J.T. Barrett relieved Cardale Jones after Jones threw a pair of first-half interceptions. Whether the quarterback is the root of Ohio State's issues — Meyer described the Buckeye offense as "discombobulated" after committing five turnovers Saturday — remains to be seen.

POWER RANKINGS

1. Ohio State: The No. 1-ranked Buckeyes are saying all the right things, but not doing them. It's early, but the defending national champs already look weighed down by the expectations.

2. Michigan State: The Spartans moved up to No. 2 in the polls, and their body of work has a more impressive win (Oregon) than OSU's resume.

3. Wisconsin: First-year coach Paul Chryst, a former offensive coordinator of the Badgers, has improved the play of quarterback Joel Stave. That's the biggest change so far.

4. Northwestern: The resurgent Wildcats are already two wins shy of matching the five they won in each of the past two seasons. Ball State should be their fourth victim.

5. Iowa: The undefeated Hawkeyes are off to their best start in six years, although it took a 57-yard field goal as time expired to beat Pittsburgh. Keep an eye on Iowa City.

6. Minnesota: An ugly 10-7 victory over Kent State dropped the Gophers in this week's power rankings. Love the defense. Hate the offense. Next up is Ohio.

7. Michigan: There's something happening up in Ann Arbor. The savior Jim Harbaugh, no surprise, is quickly putting his mark on the improving Wolverines.

8. Nebraska: Difficult losses to BYU and Miami have the Cornhuskers 1-2 for the first time since 1981. Mike Riley is about to realize how hot it gets in Lincoln.

9. Penn State: The Nittany Lions showed some offense as Saquon Barkley ran through awful Rutgers for a career-high 195 yards, most by a Penn State true freshman since 1998.

10. Illinois: OK, the schedule isn't tough, but give the undefeated Hoosiers credit for coming from behind in the second half of all three victories.

11. Indiana: New quarterback Caleb Rowe led the Terrapins to a win over South Florida. Now can he handle the atmosphere at West Virginia?

12. Maryland: A 34-point loss at North Carolina brought the Illini and interim coach Bill Cubit back to reality. How will they respond?

13. Rutgers: The Scarlet Knights are giving a bad name to train wrecks. But, hey, think of that huge television market they offer!

14. Purdue: Not sure the Big Ten's worst team can handle playing up against a Mid-American Conference foe in Bowling Green.
