Praise for The Last Man To Let You Down

“Big Dink begat Little Dink. Little Dink grew up and became an author, publisher and great Georgian. Much of his success is attributed to Big Dink. This is what he writes about ... true to form, it is excellent.”

—Larry Walker, Lawyer, Legislator and Author

A gifted raconteur, Dink NeSmith takes us inside a family and an institution—the Southern funeral home.”

—Charles N. Davis, Ph.D., Dean of Henry W. Grady College of Journalism and Mass Communications, University of Georgia

“Dink Jr.’s remembrance here of his father’s hard, Depression-era upbringing and character-building lifestyle is fun and worthy of reading for all of us who cherish the bonds of family and the importance of enduring core values.”

—Robert Williams, Publisher, The Blackshear Times, past president of the National Newspaper Association

“In this book, he turns his attention to his father, which tells a lot about how Dink Jr. was raised and how he became a statewide figure not only in newspapers but in numerous leadership roles.”

—Elliott Brack, former Publisher, Wayne County Press, Publisher, Gwinnett Forum and Georgia Clips

“If remembering is an art form, then this book is art.”

—Rick Bragg

Pulitzer Prize-winning author/columnist

“For more than 50 years I have observed this principled fellow, Dink, who possesses good humor and deep love for his family, hometown and alma mater. He grew to become a top journalist, photographer, businessman, community leader and Georgian. ... I highly recommend this ‘father-like-son’ journey.”

—Vince Dooley, former head football coach and athletic director, the University of Georgia, Georgia Sports Hall of Fame, College Football Hall of Fame

Family and friends are life’s most-valued treasures. I have been richly blessed with both. The goal of The Last Man To Let You Down is to pay tribute to the people I love. Add to that the blessing of growing up in Jesup. Wherever I am, my heart is always in Wayne County.
