Using Audience Data to Find Sponsors and Dollars

The opportunity:

After seeing how other media companies have created custom sponsorship solutions for sports content, RTD Managing Editor Mike Szvetitz and Digital Sales Director Broderick Thomas worked together to create an advertising package for our Washington Redskins content. The Washington, D.C.-based team is the local team for many of our readers. Since their summer training camp is held in Richmond, we knew that we had an opportunity to expand our Redskins vertical.

The plan:

In the summer of 2017, we evaluated our coverage of the Redskins and created a custom sponsorship package for an advertiser who wanted to reach local fans. Data from Google Analytics told us that we have a significant niche audience for Redskins content, and our newsroom has often dedicated resources to covering the nearly local team. But the more significant data use didn't come into play until pricing the sponsorship.

Using Audience Data to Find Sponsors and Dollars

The role of audience data:

Thomas says that the data let him know how to determine the best price for the package. We offered advertisers the exclusive opportunity to advertise alongside our unique Redskins content wherever it appeared in print and online. Although we've offered targeted sponsorships before, in this case we were able to extend the sponsorship to video and email newsletters, in addition to traditional print and digital banner ads. A restaurant chain, owned by a Redskins fan, bought the sponsorship, and his business benefited from partnering with us to sponsor our Redskins coverage.

Instant replay:

With the 2018 professional football season kicking off soon, we're evaluating our audience and revenue data associated with this sponsorship and preparing our game plan for the second part of this year. After reviewing the data, Thomas has been able to build additional revenue opportunities into our Washington Redskins sponsorship package that could include additional advertisers or an increased presence for one advertiser who is ready to take on the entire vertical. Our revenue potential is 100 percent higher going into the second year of this sponsorship because we have a clear picture of our audience's behavior, and we have a solid understanding of what will translate into success for our advertisers. As Thomas puts it, audience data are our barometers for predicting opportunities.

"How your news coverage impacts your revenue" is the subject of our next P2P video conference call.

Thursday, July 19, from 2-3 p.m. (EDT).

The price of admission: submit an example of how your news coverage has impacted your revenue by July 13. Publishers who share an example will gain access to the video conference and the entire collection of ideas submitted. Send one idea, get many more.

In submitting your idea, please tell us:

- How your news coverage has impacted your revenue either positively or negatively.
- What has been key to growing revenue through news coverage?
- What's a challenge your newsroom faced and how was it overcome?
- Contact name, number and email of the person who can provide more information, if another SNPA member has follow-up questions.

To register:

- Send an email by July 13 to Edward VanHorn (edward@snpa.org) with the subject line: P2P.
- Include at least one example of how your news coverage has impacted revenue.
- Check your in box for instructions for joining the conference.
